NATIONAL & INTERNATIONAL NEWS

◆ The White House is defending its massive phone surveillance program as a "critical tool" in fighting terrorism, but critics are calling it a huge over-reach. The Obama administration used a secret court order to collect millions of Verizon telephone records from Americans in an effort to track down terrorism suspects. The Obama Administration says that they cannot listen in on anyone's telephone calls, nor have access to the content of any communications, or the name of any subscriber.

◆ The season's first Atlantic tropical storm, Andrea, was churning in the Gulf of Mexico, centered about 100 miles east-southeast of Apalachicola, Florida. Andrea is expected to drench much of the U.S. Southeast as it cuts across Georgia and travels up the Atlantic coastline.

◆ The nation's transplant system is facing an unprecedented challenge after a federal judge allowed one dying child, and a day later another, to essentially jump the line in rulings that could have ramifications for thousands of people awaiting new organs. Dr. John Roberts of the Organ Procurement and Transplantation Network's board states, "the problem is, we can't build a system around making exceptions for everybody that isn't getting the transplant when they need it."
