Local & State News

◆ DO YOU KNOW WHAT THIS IS?

No doubt you have seen those yellow things with raised dimples at some of the pedestrian crosswalks in Downtown Athens, around schools, and in some other locations around the area. They are known as "truncated domes." They are warnings for people who are blind or have other visual disabilities. They are required for new sidewalk construction under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

CLARIFICATION: In Tuesday's Morning Fax, we did a story about the cost of getting a ticket for a moving violation in the City of Athens. Police Chief Chuck Ziegler points out that the fines for violations in Athens have been lower than surrounding cities for years. For example, court costs in Athens are $90. They are $151.25 in Calhoun, $130.00 in Englewood, and $113.75 in Niota. The purpose of our story was not to imply that Athens has higher fines than other cities. It was simply to let motorists know that it is expensive to break the law, no matter where you get pulled over.

NATIONAL AND WORLD NEWS

- ◆ A man arrested for breaking onto White House grounds by jumping over a fence in March was killed Tuesday after he attacked a deputy with a knife at a courthouse in West Chester, Pennsylvania.
- ◆ A Ukrainian film director, Oleg Sentsov, has been sentenced by a Russian court to 20 years in a labor camp for plotting terrorist attacks against Russian organizations in Crimea following the region's seizure by Russian troops in the spring of 2014. Sentsov has denied the charges which Amnesty International and other rights organizations have condemned as fabricated.
