Teen Suspect in Fatal Alcoa Crash Transferred to Adult Court

A Blount County Juvenile Court judge has ordered 17-year-old Maddex Forsythe to be tried as an adult for felony murder in the death of Madison Hoese, who was killed in a March 2024 crash at the intersection of Hall Road and Lincoln Road in Alcoa.

Forsythe, a passenger in a stolen vehicle, was 16 at the time of the crash. The judge ruled he was beyond rehabilitation within the juvenile justice system, citing more than a dozen prior offenses.

The two-day hearing included testimony from mental health experts, a probation officer, and the Tennessee Department of Children's Services (DCS). While Forsythe's attorney and DCS argued he could still be rehabilitated, prosecutors contended he posed a risk to public safety.

Morning Fax Forsythe and another teen, who was driving, were in DCS custody when they escaped, stole a car, and later crashed into Hoese's vehicle while allegedly intoxicated before fleeing the scene.

Hoese's family expressed relief at the ruling. A transfer hearing for the driver is expected at a later date.
